

PRINCIPLES & PRACTICE OF MANAGEMENT

Brand: Mehta Solutions

Product Code: case423

Weight: 0.00kg

Price: Rs500

Short Description

PRINCIPLES & PRACTICE OF MANAGEMENT case study

Description

After surviving from an attack on her life from Taliban, Malala intensified her efforts to fight for the Children's rights and girls' education. In her endeavor to achieve the objectives, she had been awarded the Nobel peace prize award for the year 2014. This case therefore focuses on the life and work of Malala and provides a discussion point on the management concepts of motivation and leadership. On December 10, 2014, Malala Yousafzai (Malala) became the youngest person and the first Pakistani to receive the Nobel Peace Award. She received the award along with Indian child rights activist Kailash Satyarthi . Speaking at the event, Malala described herself as a committed and stubborn person aiming to look at a world where every child would have access to quality education, every woman would have equal rights, and where there would be peace in every corner of the world. She also spoke about the passion young girls had for education in her region. She said in a simple yet strong message: "We had a thirst for education, because our future was right there in that class room, we would sit and learn and read together." Malala had a lot of dedication and motivation towards education and believed it was a boon to all human beings, especially children.

Answer the following question.

Q1. Explain the leadership qualities in Malala.

Q2. Discuss the life and work of Malala.

Q3. Explain the motivation behind Malala's activities.

Q4. Discuss the reasons for awarding the Nobel peace prize to Malala.

Details

1. Case study solved answers

2. pdf/word

3. Fully Solved with answers